4-year ACT Score Average

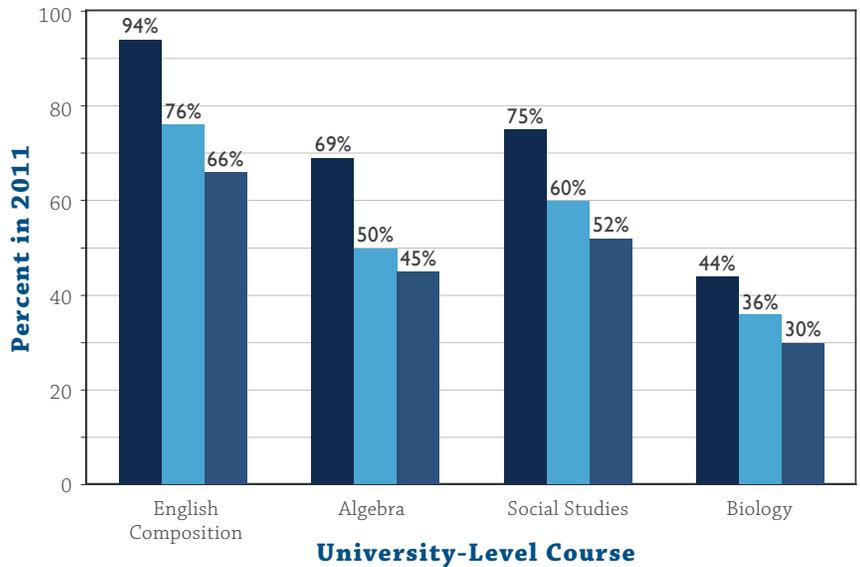

The ACT test is the most widely accepted university entrance exam. The ACT assesses high school students' general educational development and their ability to complete university-level coursework. Universities use the ACT scores and SAT scores as predictors of university success.

Percent of ACT-Tested Students Ready for University-Level Coursework

Through research with universities, ACT established readiness benchmark scores for designated university courses. They established score levels in English, Math, Social Science, and Science that are predictors of university success. This graph shows what percentage of students are predicted to have success in college courses based on their ACT scores.

Our students have been accepted at many leading universities throughout the United States, including Arizona State, Baylor, Boston University, Duke, Georgetown, Illinois, Johns Hopkins, Michigan, Nebraska, New York, Ohio State, Rutgers, Parsons Fashion Institute, Pepperdine, Purdue, Temple, Washington, and Wisconsin.

Nebraska Christian Schools

Nebraska Christian students Yuying (Janet) and Peizhao (Joey).

Joey recently scored 31 on the ACT and 108 on the TOEFL. “I have applications out to Columbia University, Northwestern, Cornell, the University of Michigan, and Chicago University. I haven’t decided on a major, but I am considering business, journalism, and theater arts.” — Joey

“I was not used to being able to talk one-on-one with my teachers because our classes were so much larger in China. In China, I would usually just ask a student if I had a question; here it is such a more relaxed atmosphere. You can feel free to discuss your questions with your instructors. It is much more than a student/teacher relationship—more like talking to a friend. The smaller classes are wonderful.” — Janet

“Speech was very beneficial to me. I used to be afraid to stand in front of an audience, but now I actually enjoy getting up and addressing a group of people. It is a skill that will be beneficial to me all through life in whatever job I pursue. Working on yearbook has also been a rewarding experience. I have developed both my writing and leadership skills. As editor of the yearbook I am in charge of the staff. It is a big responsibility, and having the experience will be valuable to me in the future.” — Joey

“I loved the outside trips, not just because they were fun, which they were, but also for the educational opportunities that we experienced. My favorite trips were to Washington D.C., Dallas, and Houston. We have gotten to attend Broadway shows and musicals (my favorite was Les Misérables) and those are always great. Our dining opportunities were awesome—the best ever! I have loved being involved in music. It is very special because of the spirit that exists between students. It gave me the chance to do things I would never have had the chance to do in my school in China.” — Janet

“The best thing [about living in the dorm] is that it teaches us how to learn to live with others, to share and learn responsibilities and discipline. It is essential to learn how to communicate with others if we want to be successful, and in a dorm you really develop those skills. Dorm living was really good; it was a valuable time to grow up without our parents, yet still have the guidance from the dorm parents to help us through the rough spots.” — Janet

“My parents wanted to send me to the United States because my father felt that I was too distracted in China and my grades and efforts were not what they should be (my father was right). At Nebraska Christian I have studied harder, been focused, and done well. My parents are very happy with Nebraska Christian.” — Joey
